Consider the following quotation from the electronic version of the ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, from the article "Calendar":

"THE CALENDAR DATING OF HISTORICAL EVENTS AND THE DETERMINATION OF HOW MANY DAYS HAVE ELAPSED SINCE SOME ASTRONOMICAL OR OTHER OCCURRENCE ARE DIFFICULT FOR A NUMBER OF REASONS. Leap years have to be inserted, but, not always regularly, months have changed their lengths and new ones have been added from time to time and years have commenced on varying dates and their lengths have been computed in various ways." (Encyclopedia Britannica, article "Calendar")

Here the Encyclopedia Britannica points out some of the very real difficulties we have in exactly pinpointing specific days for historical events. It is in fact VERY EASY to be out by a day or two in our calculations of dates for specific biblical events. Understand that ALL OF OUR CALENDAR PROGRAMS, that try to establish dates of events 2000 and more years ago, SIMPLY IGNORE THESE DIFFICULTIES. The one exception is that they all make the adjustment from Julian to Gregorian calendar, because that particular adjustment is very well documented. And astronomy programs do exactly the same thing: they obviously ignore difficulties they are not aware of; and difficulties and changes that are not clearly documented but which they have an inkling of, they make their own personal judgments on, which may not have anything to do with what actually happened back in history.

THE YEAR 30 A.D.

- 1) The calculated molad of Tishri was Saturday, 16 September at 2:19:33 a.m. at night.
- 2) No postponements were enacted because that molad did not fall on an inconvenient day of the week. Therefore Saturday, September 16 was pronounced as the Day of Trumpets.
- 3) This results in a Passover for Wednesday, April 5 (observed the previous evening after sunset).
- 4) Thus the calculated Jewish calendar readily establishes a Wednesday Passover for 30 A.D.
